“luxta propria principia”: Bernardino Telesio on the Nature or the World.

Bernardino Telesio has been working on his treatise about nature for all his life, and his major input to intellectual history can be seen in his general premises as much as in his actual explanation of particular physical phenomena. The paper will focus on Telesio's gnosological system as it appears in the explanation of some particular natural phenomena, referring to the three different editions of the text. Telesio's position towards Aristotle will be also taken in account, considering some of his terminological choices. I will conclude briefly examining the Italian translation of the second edition, considering Telesio's position towards language.
